NOTES	SUMMARY
--------------	----------------

+	can defend on the block out to the three point line	De'Andre is young, but shows flashes of offensive and defensive potential. He is still employed in limited use, but his 20 minutes were rather productive. He is a good defender, with impressive lateral and vertical speed allowing him to move between the block and the 3 point line. He has a nice shooting stroke, and hit a deep midrange 2 from the corner as well as a three-pointer later on. He also possesses the ability to get to the rim, but he was rather reserved in doing so. Over time, he will grow into his offensive arsenal, but he is limited by his decision making at this point. His impact comes mainly on the defensive end, where he should be credited with two steals. On a breakaway, he failed to show elite speed or athleticism, but he stumbled so I won't make too much of it. For his size and IQ, he should be better on the offensive glass, as he was often pushed out of the way by Skara of Clemson. Overall, he is young, but has a promising future with his defensive potential and having only scratched the surface of where his offensive weaponry could go.
